COURSE DESCRIPTIONS

ART 224-01A: Printmaking

James Hendershot

Art majors and non art majors will be able to succeed in this course. A drawing course is not a required prerequisite for printmaking 224. We will work with the following processes:

Monotype, Collagraph, Relief/Woodcut, and Intaglio: An image etched on a metal plate.

Students will also be learning the art of papermaking. This course will provide a connection and an enhancement to ART 233D (The Artist Book) and ART 233H (Art of the Printed Book).

BIOL 373-01A: Introduction to Bioinformatics (see description under MATH 340)

COLG 105-01A: Reading Group: Not My Turn to Die: Memoirs of a Broken Childhood in Bosnia, by Savo Heleta

Ron Pagnucco

Savo Heleta, a 2006 graduate of Saint John's University, wrote a powerful book "Not My Turn to Die, Memoirs of a Broken Childhood in Bosnia", a personal testimony of one's family struggle to survive in war-torn Bosnia and Herzegovina. This is a story of Savo's personal journey from an angry, revenge-seeking teenager to a young adult devoted to peace and reconciliation. War is not only what we see and read in the news; behind each conflict is complex matrix of stories of ordinary people whose voices are often unheard. This course offers an opportunity to learn about the experiences of people living through conflict where issues are never simply black and white.

The class facilitator, Dr. Ron Pagnucco, will be joined by co-facilitators Kristina Seslija, Sanja Dermanovic and Vanja Sudar, peace studies majors from Bosnia and Herzegovina who personally experienced the war. Videos and personal stories from different perspectives will supplement the book. An opportunity for email discussion with the book's author, Savo Heleta, is also being planned.

ETHS 390-12A: Ethics Seminar: The Fragility of Goodness

Margaret Cook

We would all like to believe that we can take some credit for our own good character, and that good character will help us survive whatever life throws at us. Most of us think we are good people, yet we do not always live up to our expectations of ourselves. Martha Nussbaum, in The Fragility of Goodness, argues that luck has a great deal to do with character, and that human beings can suffer experiences that make good people become bad. Others look to selfishness or original sin. Philip Zimbardo, in The Lucifer Effect, argues that the notorious Stanford Prison Experiments shows that good people can be seduced or induced by situational forces to commit evil acts. We will look at moral crises in literature and films. Possible readings include the Greek tragedies Antigone and Hecuba, Jonathan Shay's Achilles in Vietnam together with Homer's Iliad, Tim O'Brien's In the Lake of the Woods, Elie Wiesel's Night and Dawn and the films "Atonement," "Sophie's Choice," "Shindler's List," and "Life is Beautiful."

MATH 340-01A & BIOL 373-01A: Introduction to Bioinformatics

Jennifer Galovich

"Bioinformatics" refers to the collection of theory and tools used to answer questions about the nature and interpretation of molecular information – it is all about "making sense of molecular messages". In recent decades, mathematicians, biologists and computer scientists, working together, have assembled enormous data banks of DNA sequences and powerful computer programs and machines for analyzing them. So our main take will be understanding the nature of these molecular messages – what kinds of questions can this data address? We will also study algorithms that have been devised for addressing these questions. In so doing we will both practice using the algorithms and deepen our understanding of the mathematical ideas that justify them.

Much of the course is motivated by questions in phylogenetics and molecular evolution. We will also learn about machine learning ideas – neural networks, hidden Markov models, and the like – which have been very helpful in recognizing patterns and have been particularly useful in analyzing data from microarrays or locating genes in a genome.

Throughout the course we will, as much as possible, practice our tools on actual data. In particular, SJU/CSB was recently selected to conduct research as part of the Undergraduate Microbial Genome Annotation Project overseen by the Joint Genomics Institute and the Department of Energy. So, as part of our course, we will be able to "adopt" a genome, then attempt to locate genes and identify their function. In the end, our work could be included in the on-going Genome Encyclopedia of Bacteria and Archaea.
